Becton School has presented a detailed profile of evidence that demonstrates they are Excelling across all eight competencies of the School Mental Health Award. The school has used the framework and content of the Award to very good effect to develop their mental health and wellbeing strategies, structures and practices from a strong starting point.

Becton School operates across four sites and has pupils with a range of special educational needs and/or disabilities. The school mental health award lead talks of Becton being a very supportive community. Bespoke packages are put into place to help each pupil settle in and there are bespoke timetables in support of the range of needs of the children. There is an holistic approach with multidisciplinary teams, including social services, to create care packages for each of the pupils and to support their parents. The pupils take ownership of their own curriculum. It is important to the school that the pupils have control about what is important during their time at Becton. Staff guide rather than enforce learning. The school lead reports that parents feel they can relax as the children are having a good experience through being at Becton. Parents are appreciative and staff have received many thank you letters.

The staff feel well looked after with wellbeing activities taking place in each half term, social events and an annual personal day. Every member of staff has clinical supervision and training has been put in place by an EP. The senior leaders of the school are very supportive of the staff in helping them to do their jobs and there is no stigma around mental health for either the pupils or the staff. Governors are very supportive of the mental health and wellbeing of staff as well as the pupils. They are frequently updated and visit the school to better understand the mental health needs of the staff and pupils. The priority of leaders including governors is to focus on “what keeps the school safe, the impact of future developments on the current offer and the mental health of staff and pupils”.

Using the School Mental Health Award framework has enabled staff to ensure that practice is embedded and that they know it has impact. They have a clear understanding of the “relevance and importance of things that were in place”. Moving forward, the lead reports that the framework is “a tool that I’m using to focus on mental health for the coming years”.

Staff at Becton school have outreached in a range of ways. The school lead has worked with staff at another special school to create an action plan for mental health. She will also be delivering mental health training and resilience training at this school. At the Sheffield SENCo conference, the lead delivered training on self-harm. She has also delivered training to Sheffield City Council on self-harm and supported policy development of the council’s safeguarding leads. The Chatsworth House education team have been trained in supporting mental health and SEN co-morbidity to better meet the needs of children who visit the estate. Staff from Becton work with individual schools in Sheffield, when requested, in order to help these schools to get their pupils back into education in their own settings. Staff from other children’s hospital schools have visited Becton school from across the country. Becton School also planned and hosted the national Hospital Schools Conference.

I have no hesitation in concurring with the self-assessment made by the school and recommend that Becton School is awarded the Carnegie Centre of Excellence for Mental Health in Schools School Mental Health Award at Gold level.
